

UAF BUDGET REDUCTIONS

UAF funding comes from a variety of sources. About 40 percent is from state general funds and the remaining 60 percent comes from things like externally funded research activity, student tuition and fees, and auxiliary activities.

Because a large percentage of the UAF budget comes from the state, and because the cost of doing business rises with inflation each year, even flat state funding has a sizeable effect on UAF operations. In recent years, as state revenues declined, appropriations to the university have gone from flat to reduced.

UAF is in its third year of state funding cuts. When combined with increases in operating costs, the result is substantial budget gaps. That gap in FY14 was $8.5 million. In FY15, the shortfall increased to $14 million. UAF was anticipating a similar gap in FY16, however. For the UA System, the total reduction in state compensation increases. Compensation increases are usually funded as an ongoing commitment. UAF will shoulder approximately $13.1 million of the reduction. When combined with other UAF-specific fixed costs, debt service requirements, and compensation increases that must be maintained in future years, UAF is facing a budget gap of about $20 million in FY16.

UAF will be a smaller institution in the coming years, but is committed to continuing to offer quality programs and services for Alaskans. Multiple committees spent significant time last fiscal year assessing academic and nonacademic program alignment with UAF priorities. A committee was also assigned to consider options for generating new revenue. UAF-wide, spending reductions in FY16 will amount to approximately 11 percent of state revenue and more than 7 percent of all unrestricted funds, which includes tuition, indirect cost recovery for sponsored activities, and other external funding sources.

In addition to furloughs by senior leadership and executives, UAF will reduce its spending in a variety of ways. UAF leaders have worked closely with deans, directors, and the budget and special review committees to allow for those closest to the programs and services to help make strategic budgeting decisions. In an effort to preserve academic program quality and continue research efforts, support administrative service units are making deeper cuts than academic and research units.

Additional information on the campus-wide and unit-level effects of the FY16 budget reductions is detailed in the body of this document.
