years ago one even broke down in tears on that first day, sobbing, "It's not what I expected." Well, she stayed anyway with lingering fear and isolation, got through weeks of courses--even had fun with other students--came back and enrolled as a teacher. Now she is a teacher.

RAHI'S MAGIC WORKS

"I am here to help you learn English," says Sam Charley, RAHI's best effort to teach English to the people of Toksook Bay.

"I assure you," he insisted, "he has not been disappointed." He has kept coming back ever since. Mr. Toksook Bay, has been the English teacher for a remarkable 15 consecutive years. He has Joshua has plans to enter the University of Alaska Fairbanks in the fall of 2003.

The two students are sitting in front of a computer monitor displaying flight simulation software. The screen shows a cockpit view with various instruments and a map of a coastal area.

They are both wearing headsets with microphones attached, suggesting they are communicating with each other or with a flight controller during their session.

The overall atmosphere is focused and professional, reflecting the serious nature of their chosen fields of study.

The lighting is somewhat dim, emphasizing the glow of the computer screen and the concentration on their faces.

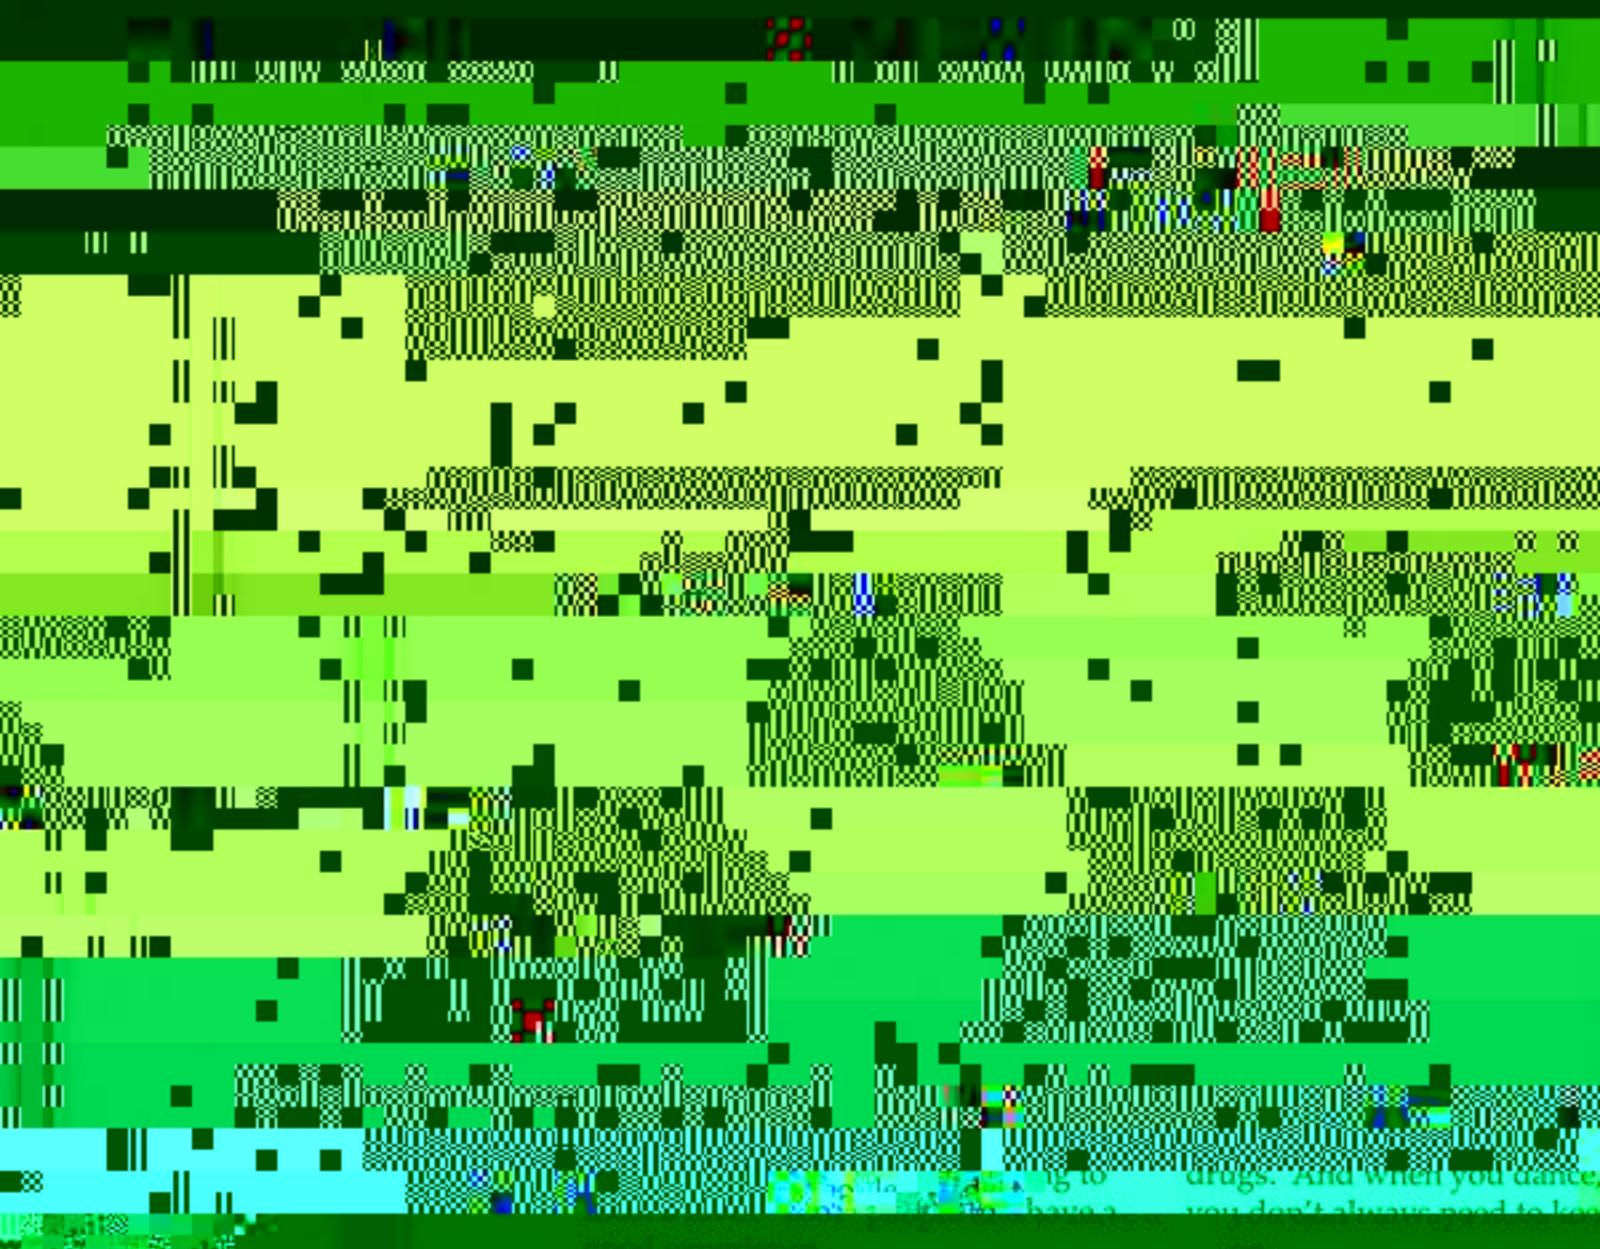

The image captures a moment of intense engagement and learning, highlighting the dedication of these young individuals to their academic and career goals.

The photograph serves as a powerful visual representation of the future professionals they will become.

Culture Shock at RAHI

in and around the luxury suites of the Macintosh Hotel, things happen. People gossip. On the balcony people go in and out. Dungey catches them caught sneaking out of their rooms at night—and the next day they're back, chartreuse and all. Guitars strum. Cameras click. And visitors do what visitors do. And RAHI graduates who have found success and now reside within or without the hotel's walls do what they do. And the RAHI experience is more than academics alone.
